Guiding questions for “Adaptation of recovery programs to European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction (EMCDDA) vulnerable subgroups.”

- What are the differences between the profiles of drug users engaged in treatment now, compared to those known in the past or to those unknown to services?
- How does the profile of drug users engaged in treatment vary by drug, gender, ethnicity, age, referral source, and housing status?
- What are the groups who fare less well (such as opiate users older than 40 years, women with addictive behavior problems, or young users at risk)?
- How has the adaptation of current programs been for opiate users older than 40 years?
- How has the adaptation of current programs been for women with addictive behavior problems?
- How has the adaptation of current programs been for young users at risk?
- What is the balance of life of individuals on a treatment pathway? Is this balance consistent with ambitions for recovery?
- What are the unmet client needs that are linked to poor treatment pathways?
- Which specific needs do you think these groups have?
- Have you identified any areas of need among your target population that practitioners were largely unaware of?
- Which of the needs of your target population are currently being met, and which are not being met?
- What are the implications for families of persons with addictive behavior problems?
- What kind of services do you offer to families of persons with addictive behavior problems?
